HONGKONG, MARCH 1st, 1875.

THE unexpected and terrible revolt of the convicts in Singapore gaol, full particulars of which were published in Saturday's impression, will serve to point a moral for the future. The rising was evidently the result of a deep laid conspiracy, and was conducted | Chinese Government, with a view to the intro- length. There was a head between second and with a desperate disregard of consequences that indicated great determination. The reflections induced on the perusal of the report of the outbreak are first of all amazement that such free intercourse should have been allowed botween desperate characters, and, secondly, that the warders should have held watch over such a number of dangerous men Jorge. Granted on the condition of his, without being armed. It may be remarked giving the ordinary bonds .- A. G. Marques that it is easy to be wise after the event; but surely it requires nothing beyond the exercise of mere common sense to show that it is unwise and impolitic in the highest degree to allow upwards of one hundred prisoners to herd together in one ward, where they would necessarily be free to hatch plots, and able, in measure, to carry them out. With such opportunities for insurrection as were afford- | moted to the command of the communy. ed in the prison at Singapore, the only marvel is that the same thing has not occurred long before. Armed with tools, which kong, which has been replaced by the Victor were instantly converted into most formid- her officers and crew will return to England. able weapons of offence, it was an easy task to overpower the unarmed warders, and the wonder is that one remains alive. The lessons which this melancholy outrage suggest will not, it is to be hoped, pass unheeded. We do not for a moment suppose they will, but lest they may not all strike the Singapore authorities we venture to give future it will be advisable that long-sentence and life prisoners shall be separated from the other grades altogether, and secluded from each other at night. Also that they shall be allowed no means of communication. The Royal Societies inviting them to send out carry outlasses and loaded revolvers, and their number should be increased. Mr. Maertens states that the consumpin assisting to quell the revolt; but it is obvious to all thoughtful persons that the task trade would be unquestionably beneficial, and would have been more judiciously performed by men less reckloss of human life, under the orders of a responsible chief. As it was, circumstances threw the management of the defence on these mon, who, fired with indignation at the shughter of their own countrymen, and their passions stirred with the letting of blood, blazed away at the miscreants without pity and with little discrimination, until, as the report says, at the conclusion of the fight, or rather firing, "the gaol-yard resembled a battle field," and the dead and wounded lay in all directions There is no doubt much needless slaughter took place, and it is greatly to be regretted, although it was scarcely possible, as matters happened, to prevent it. But it certainly lies postponed till Monday. The Coast Cup—an falling houses into water which reached to their no similar disaster occurs again.

But further comment is unnecessary in the face of the facts which lie before the public. They Verbum sat sapienti.

The European prisoners acted bravely and loyally, as British soldiers and sailors usually do when menaced by danger. Their conduct is worthy of commendation, and it will be unhesitatingly awarded. It is true th work of subduing the rebels might have fallen into calmer hands, who would have stayed the slaughter carlier, perhaps; but proper allowance must be made-for men who were full of zeal untempered with discretion They were also opposed to a band who greatly outnumbered them and were armed with dangerous weapons. THE GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS IN The following to Mr. Stewart's Annual Boport on the state of the Government Schools tilation. That being so, further discussion of in Hongkong for the past year ---Hongkoug 17th February, 1875

Bir, I bere the honour to forward to you the Blue Book returns and the Annual Report on Education in the Colony for 1874. 2.—The t tal number of scholars taught in the schools which are subject to Government supervision was 2,569, giving an increase of 283 over the previous year. This increase was not confined to any one class of school, but was general throughout. In the Government Schools, properly so called, there was an ingrouse of 29, and in the schools which receive grants in aid there was an increase of 190. S.-In the attendance, too, there was marked increase, the minimum being 126 in advance of 1873. This is the more satisfactory. as the typhoon of the 23rd September last was at one time supposed to have completely disorganized most of the schools for the remainder of the year. The break in the attendance was. however, of comparatively short duration Where the schoolhouses were demolished others were rented within a fortnight; and except in the case of one or two schools, i would bardly have been known by the middle of October, that anything unusual had happened. The Ohiness take disasters very stoically and they are not at all exacting in the matters of comfort and accommodation when they have to shift into temporary quarters.

4.—The schoolbouses at Aberdeen, Ap-li Chan, Mong Kok, and Yau-ma Ti were completely destroyed, and the mauters made very parrow escapes with their lives. The masters at Ap-il Chau and Mong Kok had put the that they must fice; and with these, the only things they could save, they escaped from their 5.-All the other schoolhonses suffered more cases, sufficient to enable the repairs to be made. .6.-The Village Schools supported by Govorament call for no special remark. The name ber of scholars advanced from 998 of the previous year to 1,054. The attention of the the bond fide property of Hongkong and Can- masters was salled at the beginning of the year to the importance of teaching Geography, and the result was very satisfactory. The geography of China, to which the teaching for the years consecutively by a Pony or Ponics, the year was confined, was in one or two cases committed to memory as it stood in the book and few intelligent answers could be obtained to questions which the book did not contain; but, in the majority of cases the subject was fairly taughtand understood. Notwithstanding this, geography is looked upon as an innovation; and, if constant supervision were not exercised the study would soon disappear from the schools. In the fact that the teaching is, for the present confined to the geography of the "Eighteen Provinces" is to be found the only lever by which the conservatism of the masters could

> 7.-As soon as a suitable book can be pared, Arithmetic will be introduced into schools; but, considering that none of the masters have had any special training in figures, t is perhaps unwise to refer to the experiment There is no inaptitude on the part of Chinese boys for the study. On the contrary, they adrance rapidly in it; but, until trained musters can be got for the schools, it is hopeless to look for real progress in subjects which depart from the beaten track of Chinese school-learning.

> 8.—The question of a Training School for tenchers is a very difficult one for Hongkong. If the time were ripe for a revolution against the traditions of centuries, a training school here would serve for the adjoining Province as well as for the Colony; but such an era is too for distant to be seriously thought of. The consequence, therefore, is that, to get an efficient training school, the Colony would have to go to great expense for the training of three or four musters a year, after the first fort schools in the Colony will, some day, pave the Extracts A REVERIE. From wearing heat to breathe the fresh sait sir, And lave our languid limbs within the waves. And drink in health and strength, we came to Stanley. A lonely place, where wandering fishers. Near the shore have made a strangling village Of hute, rough built with unbewn stones, beneath High rugged cliffs of rocks dark velveted With moss, through which the fresh green grass, wild pines Soft flowers and tender ferns rise gracefully, And lumine with soft green the sombre robe Of the great hills. One curved arm of land Winds round the bright clear waves and folds them in, So as to form a quiet resting place For the light boats the fishers use out bere. When the rough winds drive them to shelter, and The wild storms mge out flercely o'er the tossing sea. Upon the bill some mined barracks stand, That once rang out with love, and joy, and woe, And all that makes the thing which we eall life.-And often when the suft night's closing in. I stand and look down from some rocky height. And gaze until I fancy moving lights. Borne by barrying figures here and there. The footstep of the lovely sentry beats Upon my car distinctly, dull and slow ; The challenge falls : A passing note of song; A laugh a cry, or some wild chorus Startles me. Then the shrill bakle wakes the night, And living echoes ring from hill to hill. But as I strain to hear the faintest die Out, o'er the offer calmness of the sea.

A sudden stillness falls upon the air

And wakes me from my dreamy reverie.

Methought that it was muset, and a group Of soldiers aloud conversing marrily. A rapid movement -sec-they concentrate And gather round a something-some steep down, Then rising boar away in twelve strong arms; A brother stricken in the gate of health, To where, close to the sighing mournful sen The hospital stands. One runs un before, And two or three fly off for skilful help To yonder bangalow upon the hill ... And from it comes a figure in all baste Towards the group, and with them climbs The stair that leads them to the dreaded ward Where all the fever-stricken bide their doors. Bravely they bear him there, those six strong men, And parse him tenderly as women might, Nor east a thought upon the risk they run, Now black the night descends—while closs and thick From out the fetid gloom the lightning plays And each white flash of living flame is seen Through a dull yellow mist that creaping boars The fellest poison ever breathed by man. Upon the shore no kurating wave breaking Makes music; no marmur of peace or hope Is borne by the stegnant air to that poor Wretch; no thought of home will evermore bring Joy to him. If once again he wakes from Out the first long swoon, such tertures some him That, shricking wildly in his agony, He prays God's goodutes for a speedy death. And morning breaks, and then they bear away Over the hill by yonder narrow path A ghostly something that but resterday Had been as they were below'd and loving. I marked the listless step, the downcast brow, The eyes fix'd on the ground, the heads bent low, The lips compressed—in every feature Still Despair-load Jament or waiting keen Could not have been more terrible than this. A shuddering horror seized upon me-I tried to speak, -the struggle broke the spell! What joy to find that I had only dream'd! Furnishing in my fancy forth a cause. It is impossible to describe the change that has taken place since I last visited this country. It was then a perfect garden, thickly populated, and producing all that man could desire. The villages were numerous roves of plantains fringed the steep cliffs on the river's bank; and the natives were nearly dressed in the bark cloth of the country. The scene has changed.

All is wilderness! The population has fled. Not a village is to be seen! This is the certain result of the settlement of Khartoum traders. They kidnap the women and children for slaves, and plunder and destroy wherever they set their foot.

PUT THAT IN YOUR PIPE AND SMOKE IT. As they were sitting before me, Lokara lighted a huge pipe and immediately commenced smoking. This is a great breach of etiquette, as smoking is strictly forbidden in the presence of Kabba Rege.

My old Cairo dragoman, Mohammed, who was now thoroughly installed as one of the expedition, was well up in the customs of the country, and he quietly resented the insult of the pipe.

He gently approached with a bottle of tobacco. The hint was immediately taken, and the huge pipe, thus summarily extinguished, was banded to a slave in attend-
